God has designed life so that everything reproduces “after its kind.” The story of creation from the book of Genesis sets the pattern for all life. When God created the trees, plants, the fish of the sea, the fowl of the air, the beasts of the field, and even mankind, He commanded that all life would have seed in itself which would reproduce after its own kind. This law can be broadened and built upon through the scriptures to include many other aspects of life. The daily deposit of seeds of friendship produce more friends, just as bad company corrupts the good morals of otherwise good men. For this reason, we should look closely at those things which surround us and speak into our life. For example, if we desire to be successful, productive, happy, or holy we should seek to intermingle ourselves with those who demonstrate these attributes. And, do not forget, life is not all about you, invest in others.

Prayer for Today

Heavenly Father, give me the relationships You desire for my life so that I might learn from others and be able to teach those in need. Separate me from those who would ill instruct me and influence me against Your Word.
